summary

The Executive Course in Art&Law
is structured in three main modules.

1

In the first module, participants will be involved in the complex and pressing issue of art repatriation and cultural heritage law. Explore the ethical, legal, and cultural dimensions of repatriating artworks to their countries of origin, addressing questions of ownership, restitution, and the preservation of cultural heritage. Gain insights into international conventions, national laws, and case studies that shape the discourse on cultural heritage protection and the repatriation of looted or illegally acquired artworks. Engage in discussions on the challenges and opportunities in balancing the interests of museums, collectors, governments, and indigenous communities in the context of cultural heritage preservation.

The second module focuses on the financial aspects of the art world, with a specific emphasis on art financing and investment strategies. Participants will analyze the various mechanisms for financing art transactions, including art loans, securitization, and art funds. Explore the role of art as an asset class, its valuation methodologies, risk factors, and the evolving landscape of art finance. Examine the legal frameworks governing art investment, including regulatory considerations, due diligence processes, and contractual agreements. Case studies and interactive sessions will provide participants with practical insights into structuring art transactions, mitigating risks, and maximizing returns in the art market.

In the final module, participants will explore the legal aspects of art sales and auctions, gaining a comprehensive understanding of the regulatory frameworks that govern these transactions. Delve into the legal principles and best practices guiding consignments, sales agreements, buyer-seller relationships, authenticity guarantees, and dispute resolution mechanisms in the art market. Examine the role of auction houses, galleries, dealers, and online platforms in facilitating art sales, and the legal considerations that underpin their operations. Case studies and simulations will enable participants to understand the complexity of art sales negotiations, auction processes, and the enforcement of legal rights in the context of art transactions.
